CHRistians In Secular Ministry

FEBRUARY 2021 REFLECTIVE WEEKEND

'Career, calling and vocation'

'Vocation' and 'calling' are terms we hear a fair amount within the church, as well as in the secular workplace. But do they always mean the same thing? Does associating them with 'career' change the focus or meaning?

For those of us with a mission and ministry in both the church and the world (however we see both those things!), there is much to reflect on in those words.

Gill Frigerio will bring together ideas about vocation and calling in both secular and church contexts and lead us in reflections about our own callings. They may be multiple, even competing, or perhaps for you are both coherent and affirmed. We will work through a reflective and supportive process and consider how 'calling', our own and others', can be understood in secular employment and even invigorate our mission.

Gill has experience of guiding and supporting clients as they navigate their working lives. She is also a spiritual director and Discernment Adviser in the Coventry Diocese of the Church of England, and will integrate these experiences to prepare and lead this workshop. She is working towards a professional doctorate in the field of career, vocation and calling and is looking forward to sharing ideas with CHRISM members and learning from others.
